REMARKS

Another school year has added its record to the history of the past, and though the record of the schools of Grafton for 1904 may be laid away and in time forgotten, the influence the schools have had upon the town and those who have been taught will be felt through time, and the commencement of time is but the beginning of eternity.

Some of our schools have been very well taught, some of our teachers among the best. We make no individual report of what the work in each school has been, as we could only speak of them briefly and would in no way add or detract from the merits of teacher or pupil. Every one represented in our schools knows, or should know, the value of them whether good or bad.

We suggest to teachers who have failed to make their school what an ideal school should be and have felt inadequate to the duties of the school room: Determine to be no longer a failure, but resolve that every day's labor shall be more effective than the last one, that every term's experience shall make the next a higher success, that every successive class taught in any given branch, shall be better managed, more effectively drilled, more deeply and thoroughly roused to an earnest and cheerful activity than any preceding one. He who rises through difficulties to an eminent position is stronger in that position than he who is born to it.

To parents we say: If you are to pass judgement upon teachers, schools and school management, do it without prejudice or malice. Never be indifferent to the educational interest of your children, remember that much devolves upon you in fitting the child to do life's work well.

To the children of our schools we say to you, that ere long will be entrusted to your care the management of our schools, also the affairs of state and nation. Qualify yourselves for the high and noble duties that await you. There is a grand and lofty destiny to be achieved; labor for it, and now while in the vigor of youth is the time to fortify yourselves for the emergencies that await you. May you improve your opportunities in a way that you may become a bright and shining light in whatever place you occupy.

Respectfully submitted,

CARRIE L. FOWLER	}	School Board
